

San Diego, Calif.,
Sept. 28, 1928.

Dear Sirs:

Last summer I had a very lovable little kitten. Two bull dogs came into my yard and killed her. But that was alright.

This spring on several occasions I found the shrubbery partially destroyed. And that was alright.

All summer I have been cleaning bones and dog dung out of the lawn and coaxing the grass back to life where they had committed their nuisances. And that was alright.

Night before last when I came home from work, I found a hole dug in my lawn so I patched it with some sod from another part of the lawn. But when I came home again tonight I found it dug up again and now Jim mad.

damn mad.

We all enjoy taking our visiting friends around the city and showing them the beautiful homes and bragging a little about our own but lawns and shrubs costs one time and money and there's a limit to everything.

Now I'd like to see some sudden action on the matter and if none is forth coming within a reasonable length of time, I'll take the matter up myself and the garbage wagon will have some dormant dog meat waiting for them some fine morning.

Sincerely,
Ray Gozen,
